

Belle for Business.

Question.

“ Can the positive aspects of social media be constructed into a digital community that assists women in technology with their careers?

The Problem

“ In 2018, only 20% of all jobs in technology were held by women.

Kanye's announcement is a great reminder that men look at job descriptions and think—"hey, I'm not remotely qualified, but I think I could do that." Apply for all the jobs, women.

Future Female Focus

Companies need to create safe, supportive, diverse working environments for women.

- Wants to upskill and enhance career but struggling to locate resources/get funding from the business

NEEDS

- Support & Connectivity
- Communication with other women in her industry
- A secure place to reach out for help in the workplace
- Upskilling resources

Introducing, Belle for Business.

An internal community for women working in technology companies to bond, connect, upskill and enhance their careers.

Industry insight: Ermi Aiasis

Senior UX/UI Designer / Mentor / Leader

The concept could work if positioned as an internal forum community by focusing on strengthening the community through bonding, retention, communication and support.

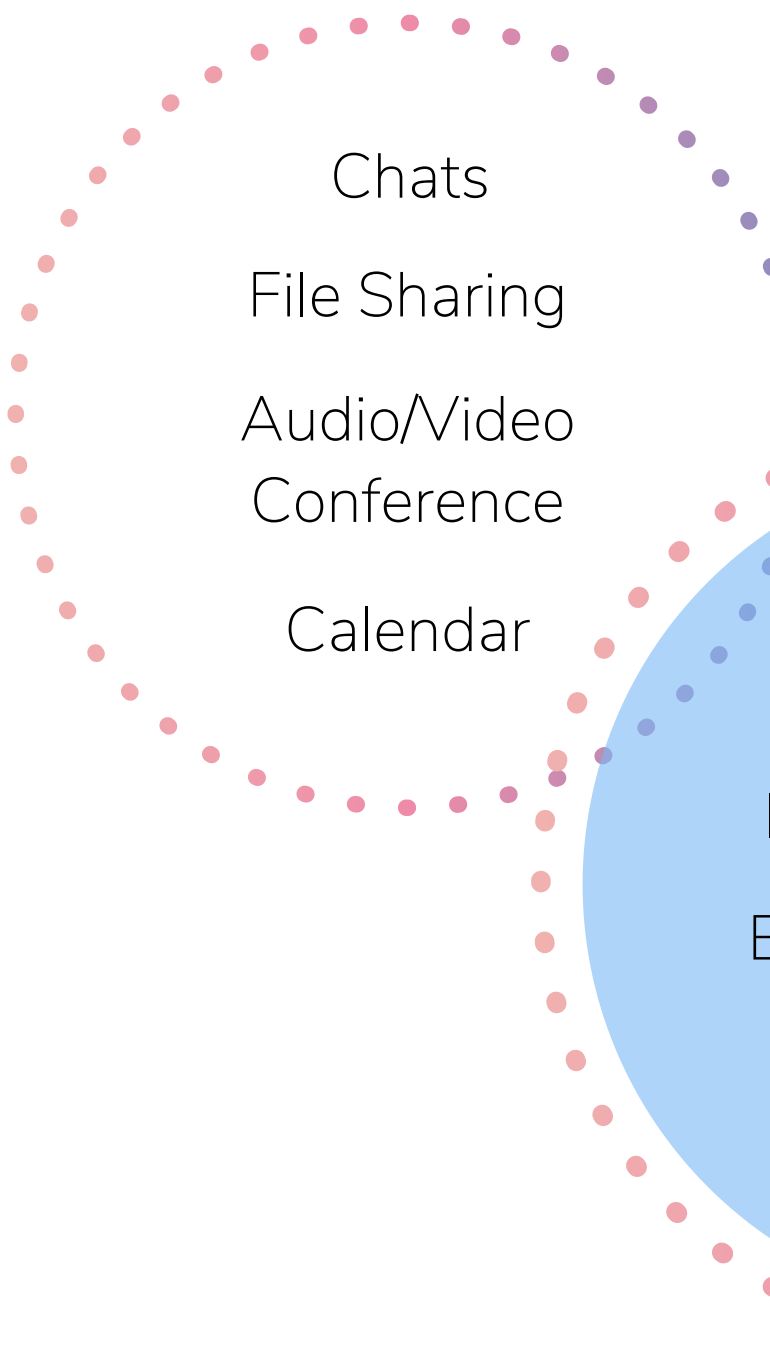

Creating a competitive USP could lay within the member benefits. What makes Belle different and why should I choose to use this platform?

Partnering with courses for upskilling women working in tech roles.

User Feedback

“ I love the colours chosen and agree that the pictures make the app a bit more fun.

“ I think that the layout is really effective and it's easy to know where to find things, but I also saw Belle so had an idea.

Future Feature

A supportive communication feature with external partnership to assist with aspects such as career assistance/guidance rather than HR connection

“ The majority of tech and social media are owned by men, so why can't women have their own community that they control? Especially when it comes to their careers.

“ Using design as a solution to create this concept is a resolution within itself.

“ The colour purple is genuinely used for women in tech, and the way it is used with the blue is very strong and bold.

“ I am so excited that new designers and women entering the tech field are uncovering these gaps and giving it a crack at creating solutions.
